Chapter 1 by Wikedywik

"Remember, click your heels, clap your hands, and that's when the transportation magic will enact." The instructor said. I was in a line with nine other people, facing her. We were all of age, which meant we had to try to survive the Labyrinth.

After clicking our heels and clapping, we would be teleported to random edges of the Labyrinth. We all would have to make our way to the center, but the last person there would be killed. If two or more people made it to the center, the process would begin again, until only one remained. But that didn't usually happen.

My whole life had led up to this moment. Slowly the clock ticked down in front of us, until it reached zero, signalling that it was time to go. The people next to me disappeared. I clicked my heels, clapped my hands, and soon I was gone with them into the Labyrinth.
